

- Whiskey: a spirit distilled from a mash of fermented grains
 - Bourbon: American (doesn't have to be from Kentucky) whiskey that must have at least 51% corn in the mash and aged in new, charred oak barrels
 - Rye: whiskey made from at least 51% rye grain, imparting more dry, spiced flavors than its sweeter cousin Bourbon
 - Scotch: whiskey distilled in Scotland from, usually, barley malt that is dried over peat fires; different techniques lend unique flavor profiles from each of five major regions
 - Irish Whiskey: must be aged at least three years, but in practice is aged a minimum of five; less earthy than Scotch
 - Small Batch: refers to superior quality spirits, especially whiskey, and usually denotes a small production
 - Single Barrel: spirit that is quality enough for a distiller to bottle alone without introducing whiskey from other barrels
- Gin: a spirit distilled with the addition of botanicals, predominately juniper, that increase the flavor profile; many regional and temporal variations exist
- Tequila: spirit distilled in Mexico from the Blue Agave plant
 - Blanco: also known as silver; bright, herbaceous flavors
 - Reposado: "rested," aged for at least 2 months
 - Añejo: "aged," must be aged in oak for at least one year
- Vodka: spirit distilled from virtually anything plant-based, usually grain or potato; clear and often without distinctive flavor
- Rum: a spirit distilled from sugarcane byproducts known for its inherent sweetness and great mixing abilities; enjoyed along beaches, on islands, and at Blue Gill.
- Madeira/Port: wines from Portugal that have been fortified (have spirit added to stop the fermentation process, which lends residual sugar and heightens alcohol content) to give them a nice, fruity sweetness; great for after dinner sipping along with dessert
- Brandy: a spirit distilled from a fermented mash of fruit, usually grapes
- Cognac: grape-based Brandy with many specifications on ingredients, aging, and technique; can be very pricey
